RE: Non-Conformance Reports (NCRs)

The Parties hereto agree to the following:

- L2.1. Non-Conformance Reports are not a disciplinary action. They are merely an occurrence report that is required to be generated for any and all instances where a product or service is found to be Non-Conforming. This is fundamental to the ISO system and necessary to identify the issues we need to address in all areas of the operation. Reports are not just generated for employees; they often are generated because of failed systems in Management or due to Management, Supplier or Customer issues.
- L2.2. These reports are also fundamental to our process of continuous improvement. Only when we know in which areas we are failing, can we make positive changes to improve.
- L2.3. All information generated as a result of the NCR reporting systems is used to determine whether we require improving our operations.

- L3.9. A review of the shift schedules will take place on an annual basis. The Union will be advised of the establishment of any new schedules and the effects it may have on the bargaining unit employees.

L5.1. The Parties agree to use the ADR process outlined in this Letter of Understanding for one (1) year from the date of ratification. At the end of that one year period, this letter will expire and the process will no longer be used unless, with both Parties written agreement, the Letter of Understanding is extended.

The parties will continue to strive to have grievances resolved at the lowest possible step in the grievance process.

ADR Processes

Mediation / Arbitration (Med/Arb)

L5.8. Grievances to be referred to Med/Arb will be discussed by the parties before an application is made and only when the Parties both agree that the grievance is appropriately addressed by Med/Arb process. The Parties may agree that a grievance is referred only for Mediation (see below) or may agree to a Med/Arb with a binding decision.

L5.9. It is understood that all Med/Arb decisions are without prejudice or precedent and may not be relied upon save as resolution of the grievance at issue. The issue of a termination will not be the subject of Med/Arb.

Mediation

L5.10. Any concessions, discussions or offers to settle the grievance, which occur during a mediation process, are made in confidence and will not prejudice either party at arbitration should the matter not be resolved.

L5.11. Notwithstanding the forgoing, any grievances submitted to mediation that remain unresolved in the process or at the request of either party may be advanced to the normal arbitration process in accordance with Article No. 12.

In the Matter of an Interest Arbitration

Between

CAW-Canada, Local 2002

And

A.S.P. Incorporated

Before: M. Brian Keller, Arbitrator
Joel Fournier and Ashley Watkins for the union
David Ross for the employer

Hearing in Toronto April 7, 2013

AWARD

The employer is contracted, through a bidding process, to provide a variety of security services under various contracts to the Greater Toronto Airports Authority. There are approximately 250 employees who are represented by the CAW. The contracts were awarded in 2010 and are now being re-tendered for a further three year period.

The security services provided by the employees include the control of restricted areas, by means of a variety of methods.

The CAW represents the employees as a result of a successful displacement application in December 2010. At the time, the employer had contracts at both Pearson and Billy Bishop airports. It subsequently lost the work at Billy Bishop and the current collective agreement applies only to employees at Pearson airport.

The award incorporates all matters agreed to by the parties to the date of this award. The provisions of the expired collective agreement remain in effect unless otherwise awarded, The provisions of the agreement awarded go into effect April 10, 2013 unless stated otherwise or unless not practicable.

Before dealing with the individual issues in dispute, general comment must be made about the financial circumstances of the employer as the items remaining in dispute all have monetary implications. I will not enter into a detailed rationale for my conclusions given the sensitivity of that information, particularly while the employer is formulating its bid in an effort to retain its contracts. Suffice it to say that I accept, based on the employer's financial disclosure that it has, for various reasons, operated at a loss the last two years. Given the nature of the tendering process, its future financial situation is, of course, unknown.

PENSIONS

The collective agreement with the predecessor bargaining agent required the employer to make a pension contribution of 20 cents per hour per employee. The accumulated money is still in the possession of the employer. On an on-going basis, the employer is to continue its contribution of 20 cents per hour per employee but payable in to employees RRSPs. It the responsibility of each employee to provide the employer with the necessary bank information to allow the employer to make the contributions to individual employees. Until an employee provides the information, the money will be held by the employer. Current employees have 60 days to provide the required information to the employer. New hires will provide the information within 30 days of being hired. Failure by new hires to provide the information in the time required will result in a loss of the payment until the information is provided, in which case, contribution will only commence at the time the information is provided.

Pension money accumulated to this point is to be distributed to the RRSPs of employees in the manner to be determined by the union. The union is to inform the employer within 60 days of this award how the money is to be distributed. The money is to be paid by the employer to individual recipients within 30 days from the date it is advised by the union how the money is to be distributed. Employees are, of course, free to use the payments lawfully, as they see fit.

UNION EDUCATION FUND

The employer is to contribute $1500 per year to the union education fund, payable May 1 each year of the collective agreement.

SICK DAYS

This is a significant cost item, each sick day representing approximately $40,000 in employee replacement and overtime cost to the employer. One additional sick day is awarded effective January 1, 2015.

TERM

The collective agreement will expire August 15, 2016, to coincide with the length of the contract to be awarded by the GTAA.

BONUS

In the event the employer is awarded the contract(s) by the GTAA, each employee who is employed on August 16, 2013, will be paid $150, less those deductions required by law, the money to be paid by September 15, 2013.

WAGES

I have carefully considered the submissions of the parties and have applied the normal criteria during my deliberations. In particular, I have considered the financial situation of the employer, the nature of the work performed by the members of the bargaining unit as well as their current terms and conditions of employment. In my deliberations I have applied the principles of comparability and replication.

By replication, I mean I have attempted to come up with a result that the parties themselves might have achieved had they the same financial information I have and had they used the same considerations taking into account all relevant factors.

I have carefully examined the comparators offered by each party. While I find them somewhat helpful, I do not find any of them particularly dispositive. The union comparator in Vancouver has to be considered in light of a very different geographical region and somewhat different labour considerations. The comparison with the casinos is flawed based on the different nature of the work. The comparison with Garda is flawed based on the very significant difference in the nature of the work.

The employer comparators are equally flawed based on the differences of the work performed and the difference of the consequences of the work.

In addition to the above, I have also considered the fact that only one employee in the last year has not received an increase in remuneration based on grid movement. The increase for each employee has been in the order of three percent.

Finally, I have considered the consequences of awarding a wage increase that could affect the viability of the employer as a going concern. This could result in job losses, potentially significant in number, as well as a situation where the employees could find themselves unrepresented by any trade union with all the negative implications that flow from that.

Based on all the above, I award a 1.25 per cent across the board wage increase effective and retroactive to April 10, 2013. In addition, there will be two further across the board wage increases effective August 16, 2014 and 2015. The cost of living increase will be the increase in the cost of living (Toronto, all items), year over year, July to July.

It is to be noted that the employer was required to increase the start rate as a result of the increase to the minimum wage. The result was that the start rate and the three month rate became the same. Consequently, there is no need to maintain the three month rate. That is, employees starting work, or having less than three months of service, will have the same wage rate as three month employees.

SENIORITY

Classification seniority will govern for bids. Over-all date of hire will govern in the case of a lay-off, meaning last-in, first-out. In the case of recall, it will be last-out, first-in.

Before any part-time or full-time employees are laid off, the employer will cease using casual employees. Except in the case of G4S employees, referred to below, overall seniority will govern except as provided above.

LETTERS OF UNDERSTANDING

Letters of Understandings are renewed with the exception of the LOU dealing with Billy Bishop employees, which is deleted.

The 2008 LOU dealing with G4S employees is spent and not renewed.

FORMER G4S EMPLOYEES

Former G4S employees hired after January 27, 2008 until February 14, 2008, will maintain their vacation entitlement based on their total seniority even if they move to another classification. If they change classification, they will, for all other purpose, go to the bottom of the seniority list for their new classification.

ARTICLE 20.9

The employer's proposal regarding 25 years of age is not awarded.

OTHER

In addition to the above specifically enumerated changes, there are other provisions awarded. They are contained at Schedule "A"

The parties are to meet within two weeks to complete the collective agreement.

I remain seized to deal with any issue arising from the interpretation, application, administration or implementation of any aspect of this award.

Ottawa, this this day 11th of June, 2013

JURISDICTION

The parties were twice unsuccessful, over a recent three month period, in concluding a renewal collective agreement through open collective bargaining. The parties jointly agreed to resolve the dispute through interest arbitration pursuant to Section 79 of the Canada Labour Code, Part I which provides:

79.(1) Despite any other provision of this Part, an employer and a bargaining agent may agree in writing, as part of a collective agreement or otherwise, to refer any matter respecting the renewal or revision of a collective agreement or the entering into of a new collective agreement to a person or body for final and binding determination.

BACKGROUND

A.S.P. Incorporated provides security services for various employers in the Greater Toronto Area, including the Greater Toronto Airport Authority (GTAA). This interest arbitration pertains to the bargaining unit employees who perform such work at Pearson Airport in Toronto.

The Employer has a 5-year contract to perform this work, having been the successful competitive bidder emanating from the most recent RFP (Request for Proposal) process conducted by the GTAA.

This bargaining unit of approximately 300 employees was originally certified by the Teamsters, Local 847 on November 20, 2006. The Employer and the Teamsters successfully negotiated a first and first renewal collective agreement. The latter had an expiry date of December 31, 2013.

The most recent collective agreement between the parties was awarded through interest arbitration chaired by Arbitrator Keller. Its term expired on August 15, 2016.

The parties successfully bargained at length during 2016 and concluded a tentative agreement on December 16. Unfortunately, it was rejected by an 82% margin. However, the parties returned to the bargaining table and reached a subsequent understanding. A further ratification vote was held on February 17, 2017. Regrettably, the membership once again voted down the agreement, but by the slimmest of margins, 51%.

The only item outstanding at this point, for this interest arbitrator to address, is the issue of $15.00 per hour top wage rate for the “TAC” classification within the bargaining unit. The Employer steadfastly refused to entertain the demand, while the Union contended that it was the missing ingredient in the parties’ most recent Memorandum of Settlement that would have otherwise ensured a positive result from the narrowly contested ratification vote.

UNION POSITION

The Union requested that all matters, with the exception of a wage adjustment for the Terminal Access Control, Backflow, Access Control (TAC) classification, be accepted as agreed upon in the Memorandum of Settlement that was rejected on February 17, 2017.

The Union also asked that the interest arbitrator remain seized to adjudicate any matters that might arise from the implementation of this instant award, prior to the conclusion of the renewal collective agreement by the parties.

The Union revisited the established consensus from interest arbitrators that the primary objective of interest arbitration was to replicate, as closely as possible, the result that might have occurred through collective bargaining, had the parties been free to enact the ultimate industrial sanction of either strike or lockout. That process, the Union urged, relied on the consideration of objective factors only, and not ad hoc or subjective speculation about what the outcome of bargaining might have entailed. Therefore, the Union continued, while the role of the interest arbitrator was to ultimately establish the terms of a renewed collective agreement, it nevertheless remained a pursuit that must be adjudicative in principle.

In Re Building Service Employees, Local 204 and Welland County General Hospital (1965) 16 L.A.C. 1, Professor Arthurs considered the subject, and explained that the process of interest arbitration should address “adjudication” and not “adjustment.” Such an objective approach would, it was reasoned, measure the aspirations of the parties with regard to wages and working conditions based on relevant comparisons, and not abstract notions of social justice or fairness:

A central issue which we faced at the outset was whether this board was to adjust or to adjudicate the differences between the parties. If we were to attempt adjustment, we would seek to reach a result agreeable to both parties. This we might do by proposing a series of compromises to them directly, or by their “proxies”, the two board members nominated by them. By a process of negotiation within the board or between the board and the parties, we would reach an acceptable mid-point. Failing of success, the board would compel “consensus” on the basis of a reasonable compromise between the negotiating positions of the two parties. Adjudication is a different kind of process. Here, the board applies evidence to pre-determined and rational standards, as does a Court of law or a board of arbitration in a grievance dispute. The negotiating positions of the parties, and the acceptability of the award to them, is at best a marginal factor in the award. Rather, the board attempts to be “objective” in measuring the entitlement of the parties to wages and working conditions.

Of course, it would be naïve to assert that our deliberations were pure adjudication, wholly divorced from considerations of adjustment. Obviously, the hospital’s offer and the union’s demand established, respectively, lower and upper limits within which our award was bound to fall. Most importantly, although the absence of truly objective criteria and the nature of the “evidence” before us made adjudication a highly creative task, we were constantly aware of the need to produce a result consistent with the labour relations realities of the situation. With these reservations, however, we did attempt to adjudicate the dispute – to decide it by applying the evidence before us to rational and objective criteria.

The union in this respect submitted that its wage adjustment proposal for the top rate of pay for TAC employees was comparable with security personnel working for Securiguard at Vancouver International Airport. The Union argued that wages for workers performing similar tasks and responsibilities at the Vancouver Airport were substantially higher than those of ASP employees at Pearson.

It was asserted that, with the exception of training (new hires), the top rate for every classification at Vancouver Airport far exceeded the $15 per hour threshold. The lowest top rate in effect from April 1, 2016 – March 31, 2017 was $17.43, or $3.19 (22%) higher than the top rate for the classification in question in this current interest arbitration.

The union further submitted that current wage rates for the TAC classification were far below the living wage calculations for much of the Greater Toronto and Hamilton Areas.

The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives defines the living wage as the income a full-time worker must earn in order to meet basic needs, pay for work related expenses such as commute and clothing, and have some money left over for one’s family expenses and broader community activities.

The Union contended that living wage calculations across the GTA have far exceeded the minimum wage set in every province and territory, and that even full-time low-wage workers do not earn enough money to adequately make ends meet. In that regard the Union provided the following comparison:

Table 2: Top Rate and Local Living Wage Comparison

Terminal Access Control, Backflow, Access Control Top Rate	Region	Living Wage	% of living wage	Gap between Living Wage and Top Rate
$14.42	Hamilton	$15.85	91%	9%
	Toronto	$18.52	78%	22%
	Durham	$17.00	85%	15%
	Guelph	$16.50	87%	13%

Source: Ontario Living Wage Network, Living Wage by Region, www.ontariolivingwage.ca

The Union then cited the perceived Employer response that ever increasing wages were a major detriment to profitability. However, recent research from economists and management experts alike, the Union alleged, highlighted a positive correlation between higher wages and improved training opportunities with increased productivity and ability to focus on the job. For example, the Union continued, in her book The Good Jobs Strategy, Zeynep Ton found that employees with low earnings and insufficient training can have a negative effect on an employer's operational goals, and indeed drag down productivity and profit. While her research focussed on the retail sector, the Union believed that it provided important insight for all employers, including those in aviation safety and security.

The request for $15 an hour for the top rate TAC employee, the Union contended, would not elevate those workers even close to a full-living wage. However, it would begin to decrease the wage gap that they experience, as they attempt to make ends meet.

Additionally, the Union submitted that the public safety and security of the aviation industry, while a fundamental goal of Security Services for all concerned, was effectively being undermined by low-wage employees at Pearson Airport, including TAC workers, who are increasingly dealing with challenges of the most precarious nature. The Union voiced the overarching concern that such under compensated employment generally exerted a downward influence on service quality, one that could potentially lead to security and safety breaches.

The Union submitted that an increase to $15 per hour for the top wage rate of TAC employees would improve worker well-being, have the simultaneous effect of improving job performance, and by extension increase public safety and aviation security at Pearson Airport. The Union requested that the interest arbitrator so award.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Employer maintained that it faced a unique challenge in that it could only perform work at the GTAA if it was the successful bidder on an RFP, providing the best service possible at the most affordable cost. As a result, if costs could not be adequately controlled, the next contract would simply be awarded to another company, through the inevitable tendering process. The very same challenges that currently govern would once again become the subject of collective bargaining.

The Employer acknowledged that $15 minimum wage rate arguments, similar to the Union's top rate demand for "TAC" employees, had received traction in the current media debate on the issue, and had also been paid lip service by proposed Ontario provincial government policy. The Employer however considered it an untenable breakthrough impulse that, simply put, was not reflective of the principles of replication, an accepted cornerstone of interest arbitration.

Therefore, the Employer requested that the interest arbitrator award the terms of the most recent un-ratified Memorandum of Settlement, as the best and uncompromising evidence of what the parties would have concluded during free collective bargaining. This would be in line with, the Employer argued, unequivocal jurisprudence in that regard, unless of course the presence of exceptional circumstances could be detected and determined. The Employer asserted that no such condition prevailed in the instant case.

The Employer further maintained that an un-ratified Memorandum of Settlement was not only admissible as evidence in an interest arbitration proceeding, but was indeed the best indication of the outcome that would have been secured by the parties through free collective bargaining.

The Employer also reminded that the party that sought to resist imposition of the terms of an agreed upon settlement bore a heavy onus of persuasion, and that interest arbitrators have only departed from such terms in situations where a bargaining committee may have been “misguided”, or where intervening events have substantially altered conditions.

The Employer relied on Mount Sinai Hospital and Building Services Union (September 25, 1969), unreported, Arbitrator Weiler found as follows:

The fact that negotiators on behalf of the parties have, in good faith, reached agreement, furnishes a strong prima facie basis for the validity of the terms of settlement. If they reasonably direct their minds to the relevant issues and principles, negotiators must be supported in arbitration, in order that the system of free collective bargaining be maintained.

Such a prima facie case is not absolutely binding though. Because negotiators are, after all, only the agents of the Parties, not the principals to the dispute, they may agree on a clearly erroneous or irrational basis. [...] However, a very substantial onus rests on the principal which has repudiated the memorandum of agreement to demonstrate why it should not be followed.

Further, in Thames Emergency Medical Services Inc. v. OPSEU (2004), 129 L.A.C. (4th) 192 Arbitrator Burkett noted:

Having regard to all of the foregoing, it is my ruling that the rejected memorandum of settlement is admissible. This is not to say that the rejected memorandum of settlement is determinative. Rather, it is evidence of the prior good faith bargaining and it is evidence of what the respective bargaining committees considered to be a full, final and fair resolution in all the circumstances. It follows that there is an onus upon a party seeking to depart from the memorandum to justify within the context of a post-rejection interest arbitration the departure that it seeks, just as it would have to do under free collective bargaining.

And in the very recent Windsor Regional Hospital and The Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, October 19, 2016 (Raymond), it was concluded that:

The fact that negotiators on behalf of the parties have in good faith, reached an agreement, furnishes a strong prima facie case for the validity of the terms of settlement. If they reasonable direct their minds to the relevant issues and principles, negotiators must be supported in arbitration, in order that the system of free collective bargaining be maintained.

The Employer believed the law to be clear in support of the conviction that what is negotiated between the parties must be respected in order to sustain the integrity of free collective bargaining. Were it not so, one party would be able to deploy the tactic whereby the other party was induced to fully show its hand and make all of the necessary concessions to arrive at a recommended settlement, only to have it voted down by the membership, and then return to the bargaining table with additional demands.

Therefore, the Employer argued, in applying the replication principle to cases where both parties' negotiating committees reached a memorandum of settlement which was jointly recommended for ratification, but not ratified, that agreement remained the best evidence of the outcome the parties would have attained had negotiations been permitted to continue and conclude.

In continued support for the established reasoning of Arbitrator Weiler, Michel Picher provided further in Salvation Army Windsor Community and Rehabilitation Centre and Recycling Unit and Service Employees International Union Local 2, (2009) that:

A review of the Canadian jurisprudence reflects that it is extremely rare for boards of interest arbitration to depart from the terms of a tentative memorandum of agreement which has not been ratified by the rank and file employees. The obvious reasoning of this line of cases is that if a board of arbitration is to engage in the analytic process of replication, to determine what parties would have agreed to if they had reached a collective agreement through free collective bargaining, the evidence of a tentative agreement reached between two bargaining committees selected by them to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment is, absent extraordinary evidence, in all likelihood the best indication of what they would have agreed to. While the fact that employees within the bargaining unit may have voiced some discontent with that agreement, to the point of non-ratification, is obviously admissible in evidence, that is not an uncommon phenomena even the areas of agreements which are not made by interest arbitration. That element alone cannot of itself be seen as sufficient to necessarily displace the presumptive persuasiveness of the terms of settlement reached.

The Employer further asserted that subsequent negotiation following a rejected memorandum of settlement does not void the reasonableness of the original accord. Rather, these efforts remained indicative of good faith bargaining between the parties, and that even if they did not result in the conclusion of a new memorandum of settlement, did not alter the influence that should be afforded the rejected memorandum of settlement.

In Thames Emergency Medical Services, supra the Employer noted that Arbitrator Burkett considered the effect of the parties seeking to “tweak” an agreement following a rejected memorandum of settlement and found that agreement remained admissible as to the parties’ best efforts to reach an agreement:

... The principal must be presumed to understand that a position once tabled by its bargaining committee and responded to becomes interwoven into the fabric of the bargaining. It is not surprising, therefore, that the rejection of a memorandum of settlement under free collective bargaining is not viewed as a signal to recommence bargaining afresh. Rather, the bargaining that follows a rejection of a memorandum of settlement is in the nature of a problem-solving exercise designed to “tweak” the terms of settlement in a manner that preserves the essential bargain while at the same time facilitating a reconsideration by the principals. Indeed, a party that sought to commence bargaining afresh following the rejection of a memorandum of settlement would leave itself open to a bad faith bargaining complaint. Conversely, a party that had put its best position forward in order to achieve a tentative settlement, only to have that settlement rejected by the other side, would, absent more, be immune from a finding of bad faith if it adopted the terms of the rejected memorandum as its firm and final position. The reality is that in free collective bargaining, the rejected memorandum remains front and centre. Although it does not constitute a legally binding document, the memorandum establishes the parameters for the bargaining that follows the rejection, notwithstanding the fact that it was entered into by the bargaining committees acting as agents for the principals. ...

Thus, the Employer argued, for an interest arbitrator to consider modification of the terms of a previously mutually-acceptable but un-ratified memorandum of settlement, the party arguing for such an approach must conclusively demonstrate that the parties entered into that agreement on an erroneous or irrational basis.

The Employer proffered that there was no evidence that the Union had been misguided in any manner, and that there had been no change in circumstances sufficiently significant to warrant any departure from the terms of the Memorandum of Settlement. Indeed, the fact that that second ratification vote failed by the narrowest of margins supported the Employer argument that this interest arbitrator should follow and apply the well established reasoning as set out in the case law above. As a result, the Employer requested that the interest arbitrator award the terms of the most recent un-ratified Memorandum of Settlement as the new collective agreement between the parties.

DECISION

As indicated above, interest arbitrators have maintained that if a party to the collective agreement repudiates a negotiated memorandum of settlement and then seeks to make additional gains at interest arbitration, that party faces a substantial onus of persuasion with respect to the merits of its contention.

It is also generally accepted as consensus among interest arbitrators that their primary objective is to replicate, to the degree possible, the results that would have manifested from the domain of free collective bargaining, where the parties could eventually apply the ultimate sanctions of strike or lockout. The mandate of this interest arbitrator was therefore to attempt to best replicate what the outcome would have been if the parties to this dispute had been reasonably and collectively left to their own device.

As the Honourable Warren Winkler, in University of Toronto (Governing Council) and University of Toronto Faculty Association (2006), 148 L.A.C. (4th) 193, noted:

The replication principle requires the [arbitration] panel to fashion an adjudicative replication of the bargain that the parties would have struck had free collective bargaining continued. The positions of the parties are relevant to frame the issues and to provide the bargaining matrix. However, it must be remembered that it is the parties' refusal to yield from their respective positions that necessitates third party intervention. Accordingly, the panel must resort to objective criteria, in preference to the subjective self-imposed limitations of the parties, in formulating an award. In other words, to adjudicatively replicate a likely “bargained” result, the panel must have regard to the market forces and economic realities that would have ultimately driven the parties to a bargain.

As well, interest arbitrators have historically been reluctant to amend a tentative settlement between the parties to a collective agreement. As noted earlier in Salvation Army, supra:

A review of the Canadian jurisprudence reflects that it is extremely rare for boards of interest arbitration to depart from the terms of a tentative memorandum of agreement which has not been ratified by the rank and file employees. The obvious reasoning of this line of cases is that if a board of arbitration is to engage in the analytic process of replication, to determine what parties would have agreed to if they had reached a collective agreement through free collective bargaining, the evidence of a tentative agreement reached between two bargaining committees selected by them to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment is, absent extraordinary evidence, in all likelihood the best indication of what they would have agreed to. While the fact that employees within the bargaining unit may have voiced some discontent with that agreement, to the point of non-ratification, is obviously admissible in evidence, that is not an uncommon phenomena even the areas of agreements which are not made by interest arbitration. That element alone cannot of itself be seen as sufficient to necessarily displace the presumptive persuasiveness of the terms of settlement reached.

Furthermore, the respective submissions of the parties to this interest arbitration did not reveal evidence of any error, misguidance, irrationality, or bad faith within the process of their arriving at the most recent Memorandum of Settlement. The Union and Employer bargaining committee representatives are competent, experienced negotiators, and sophisticated in the ways and means of labour relations. As such, this interest arbitrator must be wary of altering a fairly and openly negotiated settlement, unless there is clear evidence of special circumstances in support of the inclination to otherwise do so, particularly given the narrow margin of defeat of the most recent ratification vote. No such circumstances were apparent in the instant case. Moreover, it cannot be considered within the purview of this interest arbitrator to contemplate the establishment of a top wage rate of $15.00 per hour for the “TAC” classification, on a sympathetic or subjective basis, or in the spirit of perceived fairness.

Safety and security are of course always concerns of paramount importance, and the Union’s arguments with respect to the level of wage rates and the quality of service within the security realm at Pearson Airport are grounded, and worthy of considered future discussion between the parties. But as it now stands, the interest arbitrator is bound, as deliberated above, by concerns of a strictly objective nature. And with that principle in mind, along with a view of all of the evidence submitted, it must be declared that the most appropriate resolution to this dispute is the award of the full terms of the most recently negotiated Memorandum of Settlement between the parties.

Having regard to the foregoing I therefore award that the collective agreement shall consist of the previous agreement as amended by the items agreed upon by the parties in February 7, 2017 Memorandum of Settlement

I will remain seized with respect to any disputes arising from the parties' future deliberations on this matter, as well as any dispute with respect to any aspect of the interpretation, enforcement or implementation of this decision.
